
Exmouth is Devon's oldest beachside town

Queen Victoria's Diamond Jubilee clock tower was built in 1897 and only cost £350 at the time

Dawlish Warren has one of europes largest 'Spits' - created by the tide piling up sand

The earliest Britons likely built trading posts and ferry crossings here, while the Romans founded Exeter to the north around 55 AD.

King George III's physician once described the town as having a climate to match the south of France.

By Walter Raleigh's day, the harbour had expanded into a bustling port. Barbary pirates occasionally ravaged the coast.

In the 18th century, Exmouth became a hot spot for wealthy tourists as Europe was closed due to Napolean's wars.

Exmouth is at the start (or the end) of the Jurassic Coast, and the rocks you'll see here started to form at least 185 million years ago.
